When you buy new appliances, remember that homes built before the year 2000 use 3-pointed plugs, and those built after 2000 use 4-pointed plugs. When you add the professional installation to your new purchase of appliances from us, the delivery agent carries both types of cables to make sure your house is covered. Start by unpacking the unit and removing the filter, exhaust fan and cover of the electrical housing. Use a pencil to mark hole positions for the duct and cable. Remove the fitting. Remove any insulation or debris that may interfere with the duct installation. 5 Attach the duct From the outside, push the pipe wall cap into the opening to see if the duct is long enough to reach the hood away. If not, purchase a duct extension and attach it with sheet metal screws and duct tape. Apply the cast to the side where the cap flange is located. Insert the cap and secure with the screws. Caulk the perimeter of the flange. 6 Run Power to the Range Hood Turn off the power to the circuit board and make sure the power switches are in the off position. Slide the cable from a socket or junction box nearby through the hole in the wall. Unplug the sheath and connect the cable to the range cap with the cable connector. Mount the hood firmly by operating brackets or in adjacent studs or wardrobes. Aid may be necessary to keep the hood in position while driving the screws. Tip: it may be necessary to consult an electrician if you need to extend the wiring to the position of the venting hood.
